What we know about language, e.g., its structure and vocabulary, has tremendously impact on the way we teach language. In the past 10 to 15 years, there have been some important developments in linguistics, such as in cognitive linguistics and corpus linguistics (and others, of course) that have provided insight to how language is formed. Please give three developments (or theories) that have helped (or will help) improve the way we explain certain linguistic features in particular and language teaching in general (Use English as an example, but other languages are also welcome). You need to cite relevant literature and research as well as giving specific examples. (Each development/theory accounts for 33% of the total score)/
