In foreign and second language education, English as an international language (EIL) is a rising paradigm that attracts researchers and teachers' attention to a more cross-cultural perspective of communication, pedagogy, and investigation. Hence, issues related to EIL have been investigated from such perspectives as second language acquisition, English as a lingua franca, world Englishes, sociolinguistics, and cross-cultural communication.

In the essay, first, summarize what you understand and review key concepts of EIL. Second, based on the literature, discuss the pedagogical implications of EIL in Taiwanese contexts, and, finally, state your opinions about the paradigm from both teaching and learning perspectives. (100%)
