Western teachers unaccustomed to a classroom full of Asian students all too frequently feel that their words are going to waste because they do not get the feedback they are accustomed to not only in terms of comments and questions but in head movement and facial expression. It is all too common in such a situation to fall into a downward spiral of lowering our expectations and simplifying our language, using more direct questions that tend to elicit simple yes/no answers and decrease the possibility of dialogic exchange. This has the effect of further lowering teacher expectations in a vicious circle that amounts to failure to speak to students in a way that is capable of fully benefiting them by providing the rich language environment they need in order to learn. In this we risk letting not only our students go to waste but ultimately our words.

16. _____ Who have wasted their words?
A. Western teachers; B. Asian students; C. comments and feedback; D. head movement.
17. _____ Who have lowered their expectations?
A. Western teachers; B. Asian students; C. Yes-no questions; D. dialogic exchange.
18. _____ Who should benefit from rich language?
A. Western teachers; B. Asian students; C. our words; D. vicious circle.
