I. Multiple Choice: (60%)

Please choose the best answer to fill in each of the following blanks below.

You are probably familiar ____1____ standardized tests like Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL), the Test of English for International Communication (TOEIC), and college entrance examinations in English. They are different ____2____ classroom tests, so preparing for them sometimes requires different kinds of ____3____. The strategies for classroom tests will help you, but some additional strategies are important, too.

First of all, remember that standardized tests ____4____ overall proficiency (ability), so they are not ____5____ a textbook or a course. On any one test, you can expect to see many different English grammar points, vocabulary, sounds, patterns, sentences, paragraphs, and conversations. So you cannot really study for these tests ____6____ you study for classrooms tests. Your best preparation is to be ready for the types of items on the test, the skills (usually listening and reading) involved, and the time factor.

II. Translation (20%)

Please translate the following passage into Chinese.

Since the American dairy industry began in 1611 with the arrival of the country's first dairy cows, neither the industry's image nor its product has moved forward much, But what if you could provide the nutritional component of milk, take out the fat, rev up the flavor and give it a catchy name? That's the thinking behind a host of new low-fat milk products aimed at those most in need of calcium — and those most likely to bolt for a cola instead. Blair Gensamer, a former vice president of marketing and strategy at Nestle S.A, created Smilk (that's "smile" plus "milk"), a nonfat milk in seven fruit flavors targeted at school-age kids.
